Naru-chan is a fiction manga series written and illustrated by Masashi Kishimoto. It features Naruto Uzumaki, a young ninja who lives in the fictional village of Konohagakure. The present invention relates to a novel process for the reduction of organic sulfur compounds in a dilute sulfuric acid solution containing complex iron salts, which process is especially useful for the treatment of sour crude oil fractions. The use of sulfuric acid for the conversion of organic sulfur compounds is well known in the prior art. U.S. Pat. No. 2,488,284 teaches that a mixture of particulate solids and sulfuric acid may be used to remove organic sulfur compounds from gas streams. While this art suggests that the use of such mixtures may be more economical than using sulfuric acid alone, it does not suggest that sulfuric acid alone may be used to treat sour crude oil fractions. U.S. Pat. No. 3,113,846 teaches that acidic solutions containing solid sulfated and sulfonated iron salts, such as limonite, may be used to treat sour crude oil fractions to remove organic sulfur compounds. The use of iron salts is taught to improve the quality of the oil. U.S. Pat. No. 3,697,296 teaches that an acidic solution containing a mixture of a particulate iron sulfate and a mineral having a specific surface area in the range of 30-100 m²/g may be used to remove organic sulfur compounds from oil. U.S. Pat. No. 3,960,637 teaches that a particulate iron sulfate and sulfuric acid may be added to oil to remove organic sulfur compounds from the oil. U.S.
