An error occurred during the installation. Please try again. Looks like an apt error message, my guess being that the system upgrade to the next OS version was not successful. But going ahead with the installation because that's what you asked for. I am already running 16.04, it's just I also have another OS on here, Windows 10, which still has my Windows 7 partition and some Windows 10 stuff on it. I am not sure if I can uninstall windows 10, can I? If you can I'd be most grateful if you could do it. I don't even really use my Windows 10, it's just there as my secondary OS for testing programs. My issue, as I was trying to install the drivers, was that I needed to install the pkgs again, as I got "erridental_firmware_package_failed_to_install" error. It is a valuable piece of info to know, how far did you get before you started getting the error message, if it is you should contact your device manufacturer for help. I don't have any troubles with my Samsung S4 while installing updates. If this was an upgrade from a previous version of Ubuntu, to a new version of Ubuntu (, could be that some file format changed in the upgrade, so that the device firmware can not be read properly. Not all hardware devices works in all versions, it is a piece of information to check first before calling for the support. Don't use Dell/Asus monitors to connect to SDR boxes, you loose 4-5 kHz band. The Driver does not support EDTR.7 specification and this means that you can't use at least 40 modules. This means that only 30 Mhz + your original CPU frequency can be used. Now the idea is that you have a very high CPU frequency like 3.6 GHz, so that means that all Mhz up to that 3.6 GHz is "free" and you can install "more modules" but when you get to 3.6 GHz + your original CPU Frequency it gets a bit tricky and you need to do some calculations. You will have to let a lot of frequency out of your CPU for the S
