I have been trying to get my head around the new async method of gql. I can't work out if there is a way to determine the return value of an async method in a query. I would assume that there would be a way to do it with reflection but have not been able to figure it out. Any help appreciated. Thanks A: You can always use value.Result (or use.Result if value is a single result). If you use.Result you need to be aware that it executes immediately, so for that to work you have to use a different queryContext object. For more information, see Query.Result. See also AsyncQuery.Result, which has a lot of the same properties as query.Result.
