You can access the manual and tutorials from the Photoshop website at ` ## Adobe Illustrator Adobe Illustrator is similar to Photoshop in that it's also a vector graphics tool, so be aware that when you close the drawing in Illustrator, a closed-polygon object remains. Illustrator uses the same layer-based editing system that Photoshop does. A drawing is made by creating a shape or pattern on the canvas and then manipulating it by moving, scaling, rotating, and other operations, as covered in Chapter 6. This book is all about the drawing programs and features of these programs; therefore, we won't cover the Illustrator manual or tutorials in detail here. However, you can find an online tutorial for Illustrator at ` You can also access the manual at ` ## Painting and Drawing The foundation of all graphic design is based on the concept of painting and drawing, which can be all kinds of media. In fact, you can use pretty much any type of media you want to create an image. Everything from graphite pencils, colored pencils, pens, markers, markers, ink, acrylic, clay, found objects, your face, and even computer graphics programs, such as Photoshop and Illustrator, can be used to create an image. The key thing is knowing how to work with the tools of your chosen medium. In this section, we look at the world of painting and drawing techniques. We discuss color, composition, and more. Look at how a painting is created. Figure 4-13 offers a better example of what a painted image may look like. You can see that the artist took color samples of actual objects and then mixed paint onto the canvas. Take a look at Figure 4-14 for an example of a drawing sample. Drawings are usually created with pencils. There's a tablet system that you can use with drawing programs, such as the following: * Apen

A man who was blind in one eye for several years has become the first blind person to participate in a major open water swimming event. Simon Yates - known to his friends as "Binky" - was training to compete in the 100 mile marathon race off Teesside when he was struck by an unexpected piece of floating detritus. After losing his sight in one eye when he was aged 11, the 26-year-old endurance athlete, of Bexleyheath, now uses an adapted version of running goggles to help him through his training. But he was badly injured on his first attempt to swim the length of the Tees Barrage, Teesside's biggest public waterway. The injury forced him to abandon the race after 2.5 miles and his stricken coach, Tim Mooring, feared he may not be able to complete the marathon - as he only last attempted a similar event at the start of last year. But after a week of treatment at Middlesbrough General Hospital he managed to swim four laps. It was then that Binky told his coach he was determined to attempt to swim the total of 1,300 miles of the marathon course. "In the hospital he was heavily bandaged around the eye, you could not see what was happening," said Mr Mooring. "I phoned his mum and dad and I said 'I don't think you will see him this weekend.' "He said 'but I will swim it.' I said 'of course you will, you can't stop now'. "I don't think I have ever seen him so focused, the light shone straight through him. That is what motivated him. "He swam very well, he was not feeling any pain after he had been in the water and he swam four laps, even when all his colleagues and friends were talking to him, he was not listening to them. "It was a great achievement. I am really proud of him and it is just the start. He has got a long way to go to beat the race." Binky now plans to travel to Sydney, Australia for the World Blind Swimming Championships in July. The marathon swim off Teesside attracts more than 1,000 people each year and is also popular with triathletes who use the course as part of a 26-mile training run. The race begins and ends at Hartlepool

[A case of lung cancer complicated with interstitial pneumonitis caused by dabrafenib]. In the past, BRAF-targeting drugs have become a standard therapy for metastatic melanoma. However, the adverse effect of these drugs has not been sufficiently elucidated. We report a patient with a lung cancer with interstitial pneumonitis caused by dabrafenib. A 69-year-old female with anorexia, fatigue, and a severe cough was referred to our department. She had been diagnosed with lung adenocarcinoma with left hilar metastasis 8 years earlier, and had received docetaxel chemotherapy. The administration of docetaxel was discontinued because of the severe adverse effect. Approximately 2 weeks after the discontinuation of docetaxel, a progressive shadow on a chest X-ray appeared. The metastasis to the lungs was observed by PET-CT. Dabrafenib was then administered to treat the metastatic lung tumor. After the administration, interstitial pneumonitis with progressive respiratory failure appeared. The patient died of respiratory failure due to progression of the lung tumor. Thus, dabrafenib can cause an interstitial pneumonitis in a patient with lung cancer. It is important to inform patients about the possibility of interstitial pneumonitis associated with the drug and to carefully monitor patients who are administered these drugs.Sheffield Hallam University Nursing School Sheffield Hallam University Nursing School is a post-basic education provider for nurses in the university's Teesside and North Yorkshire campuses, in the northeast of England. History The school opened in 1977 and initially operated out of a caravan at Birkdale House, which would be used for additional rented accommodation after the closure of the school in 2015. However, a new purpose-built school building, the Stanley Nursing School building, was completed in 2015 and the old Birkdale House is now being used for additional accommodation. This came under pressure in August 2016 when the university was forced to move about 300 students from the Birkdale House site to the new Stanley Building for the rest of the 2016/17 academic year due to a lack of space. The new building has 8 teaching rooms, as opposed to the original 4, and a treatment room. The school was granted the name Sheffield Hallam University in January 2018. In addition to the registered postgraduate course in the history of nursing, there are also programmes for students wishing to change careers into nursing.
