DownloadsSecretary protein is generated in vivo from pre-procolipase cotransformed with DNA encoding procolipase and polysomal associated protein 1. A cDNA (cATK10) encoding a novel protein designated procolipase-associated protein 1 (PAC1) was isolated from a human liver cDNA library. A cDNA complementary to PAC1 was isolated from a human pancreatic cDNA library. The cDNA from a pancreatic cDNA library was used as a probe in the screening of a human pancreatic cDNA library. The isolated cDNA from the pancreatic cDNA library was confirmed to encode the mature form of PAC1. PAC1 mRNA, 2.3 kb in length, was not detected in a rat liver cDNA library. When a PAC1 cDNA construct was expressed in COS-7 cells, the corresponding PAC1 protein was detected in the medium. The levels of PAC1 protein in the medium were increased at an increased rate as the amount of PAC1 cDNA was increased, though the medium contained approximately 0.5-1% of the total cellular PAC1. When a PAC1 cDNA construct was expressed together with a cDNA construct encoding pre-procolipase in COS-7 cells, the resulting protein product was detected in the medium, and its level was proportional to the level of the PAC1 cDNA. The protein product contained procolipase and a part of PAC1. Procolipase-associated protein 1 is probably synthesized as a precursor, is transported to the Golgi, and then is released from the secretory apparatus into the medium.
