Evaluation of the Midrex in vitro prothrombin assay: a rapid alternative to the PT and aPTT for the determination of oral anticoagulant therapy. A microtitre plate method has been developed for the measurement of activated partial thromboplastin time. The assay utilises reagents that permit rapid incubation (20-30 minutes) and is used for the evaluation of oral anticoagulant agents (OAPs). The reagents include microtitre plate coated with rabbit aortic tissue factor (Factor VII-VIIIa complex) and activated Sepharose beads (Factor X), which are stimulated with activated Russell's viper venom. As compared with the activated partial thromboplastin assay (aPTT), several advantages are offered, including the use of factor-deficient plasma for component substitution, low assay volume and excellent reproducibility. The sensitivity of the method is the same as the aPTT. Further, as oral anticoagulants act upon the intrinsic coagulation pathway as well as on the extrinsic pathway, the assay can be used to monitor either of these two OAP therapies. The total data indicate that the Midrex method is a reliable test for the determination of OAP therapy. In the related art, various technologies for producing a resin mixture from raw material resin obtained by condensing or polymerizing bisphenol A to resin components A and resin components B are known (see Patent Document 1). Furthermore, resin mixtures obtained by such technologies, for example, are known as the resins, for example, in which resins such as polycarbonate (PC), polycycloolefin resin (POE), 648931e174
