This study investigated the relationships between mood disturbance, job satisfaction and quality of life in nursing students. Nursing students enrolled in a nursing course at a university in Zhejiang province of China participated in this study. Two scales, the mood disturbance scale and the job satisfaction scale, were administered to the students and a quality of life scale was also used. The results indicated that, after controlling for the depression, the affective quality of life was significantly associated with the two dimensions of job satisfaction and depression. These results suggest that universities might use several strategies to improve the quality of life of nursing students.Monday, November 21, 2016 Newlyweds settle into their new city I wish I could have taken more photos of the couple on their wedding day. BUT, I want to finish working on my watercolors. Oye! Did you see that wedding cake? It looked like a soft, buttery, fluffy cloud of lightness. It was like no cake I have ever seen before. It literally brought tears to my eyes and I was ready to dive in and eat it. They married in the beautiful downtown Jeddah. I saw the couple and I was struck with a sense of... well, time. I felt the vibe of the city in that moment. Good vibes. It was the day before the 9/11 anniversary; and I could feel it as the sun glistened off the golden domes and minarets of the city. And then I watched the couple walk down the aisle. And then they left the city. I think it took a couple of days to settle in to the new life ahead of them. I received some feedback on my recent posts about the couple. SO I decided to do a couple of new blogs about how moving to a new place can play a role in our decision to stay married or not. I thought there might be some new insights from people who have been here longer than I have. Or maybe others who are trying to decide this same issue in their own lives. This is the blog for those who have recently gotten married. Whether you are married for one day or one year, it is important to consider the following issues. Do you have a realistic timeline for the marriage, both of you and your spouse? In our case, we do not plan to give up our careers. We plan to move to Saudi Arabia for just 10 years. This year we will be engaged for three months. 5ec8ef588b
